Professional Objective

I am currently a PhD candidate at University of Twente (ending in 2017) in a research group called Design and Analysis of Communication Systems (DACS). My research is founded by the European commission via a project focus in network of excellence, called Flamingo. In addition, my research is funded by one of the main Dutch national Organisation for Scientific Research (NWO) in a project called Distributed Denial of Service Defence (D3).

I am interested in a research & development position with focus on network security and the use of big data technologies to improve network data analysis. A position where I can transfer my enthusiasm, knowledge, skills and experience into meaningful innovation to improve the security in computer networks, specially in the Internet.

International Conference Reviewer

Among more than 20 venues acting as reviewer we highlight four conferences which are the top well ranked related to the Committee on Network Operation and Management (CNOM), which is a renowned technical committee part of the IEEE Communications Society. For each conference we present the acronym, the full name, the acceptance rate which is the number of papers submitted divided by published* (according www.cs.ucsb.edu/~almeroth), and the h-index* (according Google scholar). For the entire list of conference that I was reviewer you can check my records on the known conference management systems, i.e., EDAS [link], JEMS [link], and EasyChair [link].
